1. The school at Kuchino was frequently referred to by the Soviet guards as a weather school and frequently as a "Tehnikum". It was located in an old castle on very well kept grounds which sloped from the road to a river which flowed back of the school.
  2. Two to three hundred students attended the school when it was in session. They were of both sexes, ranging from eighteen to twenty years of age, and came from all over the USSR. [REDACTED] one student who had come from Tashkent and who remarked about the fact that the students came from widely separated geographical areas.
  3. No uniformed military personnel were at the school, either as students or as guards.
  4. The school had classes both in meteorology and hydrology as evidenced by the weather instruments, the release of pilot balloons, and the amount of time the students spent making measurements in and near the water.
